After the big snow, get ready for the big melt

Now the deluge.

Bostonians are about to get a lot wetter as temperatures rise and the snow thaws.

With spring allegedly heading our way in a matter of weeks, experts are warning residents that rain or too quick a thaw could turn the city's 100-inch snowfall into a record runoff and create an urban melt-down.

"If it melts too quickly, it's going to cause a problem, because it's going to overflow the available storm drain systems and will cause backups into neighborhoods, and streets may be flooded," said MassDEP spokesman Joseph Ferson.

"If it starts to rain on top of the snow, we can have even more severe backups. But these are worst-case scenarios," he added.

By the numbers

100 roofs have collapsed across Massachusetts in the past two weeks.

- Roof collapses in Massachusetts include a commercial plaza, day care center, lumber retailer, and several homes and horse barns, according to the state's emergency management agency, MEMA.

- Seven horses had to be rescued from an Andover barn Sunday after its roof collapsed.

os," he added.

Flooding, environmental pollution and roof collapses are all concerns for the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection.

"It all depends on how quickly the snow melts. There is a lot out there, no question about it," Ferson said.

The best thing for Boston, he said, would be a slow melt, where the temperatures would rise slowly and allow the melted snow to be absorbed to soak into the ground.

That will be helped by Sunday's temperatures, which nearly reached 40 degrees, a significant spike compared to the recent spate of single-digit days.

For decades, MassDEP has asked communities to select snow fields and farms, upland and away from streams and bays, so that melting snow seeps slowly into the ground, recharging natural groundwater.

The largest snow farm in Boston is a vacant lot in the Seaport District.

For snow that melts into the streets, salt, sand and the garbage mixed in with the mountains of snow flow into catch basins, says Greenovate Boston manager Leah Bamberger.

That's why city officials are urging residents to help clear snow from their neighborhood basins, which can hold water until there's room in the sewers, preventing a backup.

"There is basically nowhere for the snow melt to go other than catch basins, so we definitely ask for help clearing them," said Bamberger. "A rapid thaw can be challenging but really, it is rain that poses the threat of flooding."

City workers are diligent about clearing the basins of debris that may be dragged into the basins, Bamberger said.

Bamberger said there are currently no plans to ditch the city's snow in the Boston Harbor.

Snow plus rain equals roof danger

Flooding isn't everyone's biggest concern. Anthony Puntin, executive director of the Boston section of the American Society of Civil Engineers, says he's most worried about the city's flat roofs.

The massive amount of snow already poses a risk of roof collapses, Puntin said. Add the threat of rainfall, and you could have a recipe for disaster.

"The biggest problem with this amount of snow is if we get more precipitation on top of it, causing it to get heavier and heavier," Puntin. "Water, believe it or not, is actually pretty heavy."

Saugus man petitions for T reimbursements

Refunds, please. With no T transportation available for days, riders should get their money back, says insurance broker.

Cameron Pond estimates that he has paid the MBTA roughly $8,000 over the past decade for shoddy service, but now he's had enough. After weeks of repeated snow-induced shutdowns T's rail, bus and ferry systems, Pond is demanding a refund.

The 27-year-old Saugus resident last week launched a Change.org petition asking the T to reimburse riders who have been left out in the cold for most of February with unusable monthly ride T-tickets in their pockets.

Unlimited T passes cost from $75 for unlimited subway and bus rides, to $362 for a monthly rail pass. T riders make about 1.3 million trips a day.

The petition is addressed to MBTA General Manager Beverly Scott, who will resign in April, and to Gov. Charlie Baker, State Rep. Robert DeLeo and State Sen. Stanley Rosenberg.

"I think this latest snow crisis has really opened people's eyes to just how bad system is," said Pond, an insurance agent who's lived all over the Boston area.

He'd collected more than 460 signatures by Sunday's Metro deadline. Pond said he'll check T ridership numbers before setting an endpoint for the petition.

He fumes at T money being funneled into station construction projects at Government Center, Assembly Station and Wonderland.

"Nice stations mean nothing when I can't get to work," said Pond, adding that he feels bad for his friends who are paid on an hourly basis.

"If you're not a salaried employee and you miss work because of the snow, you don't get paid," he said. "That motivated me to do something about it."

T spokesman Joe Pesaturo said the transit agency is debating how to handle refund requests.

"We are continuing to have thoughtful discussions about doing something for our loyal customers who have been significantly inconvenienced in recent weeks," he said.

Shooting

Roxbury man charged with first-degree murder in 2013 Copley killing

A Roxbury man is due in Suffolk Superior Court on Monday for allegedly shooting dead a 22-year-old man in Copley Square in 2013.

A Suffolk County grand jury on Friday indicted Michael Jordan, 27, on charges of first-degree murder and unlawful possession of a firearm in connection with the death of Ahmir Lee, the Suffolk County District Attorney's office said in a joint statement with the Boston Police Department.

Prosecutors say Jordan shot Lee near Trinity Church on Boylston Street on the evening of Aug. 22, 2013. Lee later died at Boston Medical Center, DA officials said.

Jordan's arrest Saturday came on the heels of a long-term investigation by Boston Police homicide detectives and Suffolk prosecutors.

The Suffolk County Grand Jury on Friday returned indictments charging Michael Jordan, 27, with first-degree murder and unlawful possession of a firearm.

At the time, former Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino referred to the slaying as a drug-related incident.

Additional details are expected at Monday's arraignment. METRO

Marathon bombing. Jury selection near end as venue shift considered

Opening statements in the Boston Marathon bombing trial could come as early as next week as the jury selection process nears completion, a federal court official said in a statement.

Accused bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev, 21, faces the death penalty if convicted in the 2013 terror attack, which killed three marathon spectators and injured 264 others. Tsarnaev has pleaded not guilty to the charges, and has appeared in court throughout the jury selection process.

U.S. District Judge George O'Toole Jr. and attorneys for both sides will continue questioning potential jurors Monday. Nearly 250 have been interviewed so far.

O'Toole this week is also expected to hear motions related to evidence, the court said.

Crippling snowstorms have repeatedly shut the federal courthouse over the past few weeks, slowing the trial. Opening statements were originally slated to begin at the end of January.

Tsarnaev's lawyers have made several requests to move the trial outside the city, saying their client can't get a fair hearing at the scene of the crime. The three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals heard arguments Thursday on the request for a change of venue. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Reality stars unhurt in multi-Kardashian pileup

Things got a bit hairy for the Kardashian family during their Montana vacation when an SUV carrying Kim and Khloe Kardashian, Kylie Jenner and baby North West skidded across an icy highway and into oncoming traffic before landing in a ditch at the side of the road, according to TMZ. The frightening mishap occurred after a passing tractor trailer dumped snow on the windshield, obscuring the view of Khloe, who was driving and swerved onto a patch of black ice. There was no damage to the vehicle and all the passengers were fine, if shaken. Kim was quick to post an Instagram of the snowy wilderness celebrating their good fortune. "Thank you God for watching over us and keeping us safe," she wrote.

Amber Rose has more to say about Kanye

Amber Rose's feud with ex-beau Kanye West continues, this time with Rose striking back at West after he trashed her during a recent interview. "I had to take 30 showers before I got with Kim [Kardashian]," West said. "If Kim had dated me when I wanted, there would be no Amber Rose." But there is in fact an Amber Rose, and she's decided to make Kardashian's dubious rise to fame a focus of her retaliation. "Wait, 30 showers? But Kim let Ray J nut on her," she tweeted. Ouch. "I'm always so quiet and just a cool, fun girl. The funny thing is I'm all for a woman making something out of nothing."

Emma Watson weathers Prince Harry dating rumors

The Internet rumor mill went into a fever pitch over the weekend over talk of "Harry Potter" star Emma Watson possibly dating Prince Harry. Because, you know, they're British. Actually, the two "are perfect for each other," an over-eager source tells Hollywood Life. "They share the same wicked sense of humor." They also share the propensity to wind up in completely fabricated gossip items.

Things got so bad Watson herself had to take to Twitter to calm everyone down.

Film. 'Parenthood' star Mae Whitman heads back to high school in 'The DUFF'

Former "Arrested Development" and "Parenthood" star Mae Whitman heads back to high school for the smart and snarky "The DUFF," playing a whip-smart senior who realizes she falls into the classification of her clique's Designated Ugly Fat Friend.

Was this terminology familiar to you before you read the script?

It wasn't, actually. I'd never heard of it, but after I did hear of it, I was asking around and some people that had younger brothers or sisters told me that they'd heard of it.

What do you think of the concept of the DUFF, which is actually probably not exclusive to teenagers?

I mean, to me, it's definitely not. The reason I really liked this was because I felt like I related to it in pretty much every aspect of my life. I definitely was bullied in high school, and I still sort of feel like I tend to get categorized in Hollywood. People try to label and contain and limit you and put these categorizations on you that you don't necessarily identify with yourself.

What are some of the frustrations you've experienced in Hollywood?

For me, I try to stay as true as I can to my intuition and not really let a lot of the other stuff get in. I have been working for a long time, since I was a little kid. I remember, early on, my dad being like, "Do not take it personally, whatever you do." It really feels personal because you're putting yourself out there, and people are basically going, "You're not good enough" or "You're not skinny enough" or "You're not pretty enough," all that stuff's a very real thing. It's just limiting for everyone. When people don't see outside certain parameters, I think they miss out on a lot of opportunities to really find some interesting truth.

What sort of projects are you looking for now?

It's a new, weird frontier for me because "Parenthood," the show I was on for six years, just ended, so I'm unemployed. There's no specific criteria, but I look for something where there's a character arc, and I look for something that feels like there's a message I can get behind, or just if there's an honesty. Just something real and honest and full, where people are not two-dimensional. NED EHRBAR

Mae Whitman isn't really into the whole makeover thing in "The DUFF."

CBS FILMS

Her?

Whitman still gets people coming up to her and referencing Ann, her famous "Arrested Development" character. But she totally doesn't mind. "It happens all the time. I'm so honored that I got to be a part of that show," she says. "I adored her. She was so interesting. She had this really pervy, throbbing energy underneath. When you choose projects that you love, then every interaction that you have about people appreciating those things is really pleasant."

Neil Patrick Harris was unaccountably so-so at this year's Oscars ceremony. / GETTY IMAGES

Not everything is awesome for NPH

Ceremonies.

The Academy Awards somehow conquered a seasoned awards-host regular.

How much of a mess are the Oscars? Not even Neil Patrick Harris — the guy who kills at the Tonys and Emmys — could conquer them. It all started so well. Harris took the stage of Los Angeles' Dolby Theatre for his first Oscars gig and immediately addressed the biggest elephant in the room. "Tonight we celebrate the best and whitest — sorry, best and brightest," he quipped, winkingly referring to the heavy snubbing that befell "Selma."

But this was a false start. Savage quips were immediately replaced — as in the next sentence — by singing. Harris launched into one of those songs that Billy Crystal used to do, except only about a third of it was dedicated to jokes. Singing about "moving pictures," he offered a sloppy valentine to the medium he's shilling for at this awards show, at least. Harris inserted himself into movies, most of them old — say, blocking Sharon Stone's business from "Basic Instinct" — but also the night's only feted musical, "Into the Woods."

Speaking of which, he was soon joined by Anna Kendrick, as well as Jack Black, who offered the position that maybe movies are crap. The Oscars do this every now and then: addressing that maybe the ceremony — and maybe even movies themselves — are irrelevant. And as usual, it had no real answers — just a flashy song-and-dance number performed by one of entertainment's brightest lights.

Some major categories didn't have clear winners, but others were locks that went as expected. Both Supporting acting awards went as predicted, to Simmons and to Patricia Arquette, who spent 12 years making "Boyhood." She spent her speech preaching for equal rights for women, in a year when it was revealed certain actresses are paid less than their male counterparts — a political speech, yes, but a great and necessary one.

Brief takes

The night's weirdest moments

Why was there a "Sound of Music" montage followed by Lady Gaga singing songs from the film? The night's most inexplicable moment is one of life's great mysteries.

The night's breakout star might have been "Ida" director Pawel Pawlikowski, who got the intrusive orchestra to shut up during his speech for the film's Oscar win.

The problem

Every time I go on Facebook or Instagram, it seems like someone my age (32) is getting married, having a baby or enjoying a tropical vacation I can't afford, and it's making me really depressed.

Social media is curated to share the feelings people want to — and the tropics are just more photogenic than the office. / ISTOCK

Sounds like you're suffering from an acute case of "not measuring up." While not an official diagnosis, this modern malady nonetheless afflicts many people who, like you, fear they are not as accomplished, happy or fulfilled as their peers.

Social media is partly to blame. At no other time in history have we been more aware of just how "everyone" else seems to be living a better life than us. Most people don't post sad, gloomy pictures; you see sunbathing on the beach, not arguments at the restaurant. Studies have shown that we tend to overestimate others' happiness — we can't know the real thoughts and feelings behind the grins, so we take their smiles at face value.

It's far more constructive to compare yourself to who you were a year ago and assess whether you're growing happier, more peaceful and confident. Envy is a huge energy zapper. When you focus your thoughts on what you lack instead of what you have and accomplished, you're draining yourself of precious resources that could be helping you achieve the things you wish you had. Try the visualization exercise below that I use to help clients with envy. Then let the remainder of envious, hurtful thoughts roll down your body like water and into the gutter, where they belong.

No Insurance Necessary

NOVEL-PERSPECTIVE.COM

Kim Schneiderman's book "Step Out of Your Story: Writing Exercises to Reframe and Transform Your Life," is due to be published in the spring. Email Kim your questions at askkim@metro.us.

Visualization exercise

1 Find a comfortable seated position and take a couple of deep breaths to settle into your body. Next, allow your envy to take over, imagining all the ways you are not measuring up.

2 Once you've exhausted your envious thoughts, take a moment to notice how your body feels. Notice areas of tightness or tension like the stomach, neck and chest.

3 Now, take a couple of deep, centering breaths to release the tension. Focus your attention on your breath, perhaps thinking "breathing in" on inhale and "breathing out" on exhale.

4 Close your eyes and focus on three things you did over the past day, week or month that made you feel proud of yourself. In your mind's eye, see yourself doing these things. Perhaps focus on how hard you worked, or how well you performed, how you overcame something, made a tough choice or pleasantly surprised yourself in a difficult situation.

5 Now, notice how your body feels — is it lighter, and your breathing comes more easily? Perhaps easing your mental tension eased some of your physical symptoms, too. Take a moment to really absorb and feel any lingering pleasant sensations.

6 Next, think of a goal you're working toward. If none immediately comes to mind, reframe whatever you envy — a job, a child, an exotic vacation — as something you yearn for in your own life. Think about the action steps you would need to take to manifest your yearning.

Cost of admission

Be honest

"For many students, the initial decision [of picking a school] is an emotional one," says Schmoke. "Then it dawns on them that they'll be paying for school for 40 years."

Parents, he says, should be up-front with their children about what they can afford. "You should be researching for the best value," he says. "Negotiate for financial aid, look at scholarships."

Choices. How parents can help their child pick the right college

Parents shouldn't be afraid to voice their opinions during the search process. / ISTOCK

College hopefuls across the country will be on edge for the next few weeks as they start to weigh their options.

As students go through their checklists and start doing their final visits, one former college administrator says parental participation is key.

"For a typical high school parent, mom and dad usually don't want to discourage their kids from going where they want to go," says Joe Schmoke, the founder of University Research and Review, a firm that helps guide students toward affordable colleges and universities. "But parents should be as objective as they can to encourage their kids to really think through this."

We asked Schmoke for his tips for families.

Don't be afraid to push back

"This is the first adult decision that 99 percent of these kids are going to make in their lives," notes Schmoke. "Challenge that decision. Ask, 'why are you picking this school?'"

Talk to your child about goals

Second to costs, Schmoke says the second most common reason people transfer is because they change their field of study. "It's only natural that someone will change their major as their interests and personalities change," he says.

Schmoke also advises parents to encourage their college-age children to take a personality test to get a better idea of the kinds of careers they would thrive in. "Looking for schools is a frustrating time," he notes. "So these tests will let you figure out what it is that you are all about and what you like."

An Olympian's guide to staying focused at work

Motivation. A gold medalist explains how he stayed in the zone.

Olympian Evan Lysacek is quick to say that he was never the best skater on the ice.

"I felt that I was never as naturally talented or, overall, as good as my competitors," the 29-year-old tells us. "But I always felt that if I could outwork them, then I could outperform them."

That hard work paid off for the figure skater in 2010, when he took home the gold medal at the 2010 Olympics. Along with Paralympic swimmer Brad Snyder, Lysacek has been touring college campuses across the country as part of Deloitte's Road Show with Team USA. The two athletes have been speaking about their career journeys and how they carved a path to success.

We caught up with Lysacek after his recent appearance at New York University and asked him for his tips on how ambitious readers can achieve their career goals.

Don't let anxiety derail you

Lysacek often speaks of the anxiety that temporarily threw him off during his routine in the Vancouver trials. Since then, he's come up with several ways to manage his anxiety but says things aren't perfect. "It's constantly evolving," he says. "It's like chasing a moving target. But for me, as much as I can bring the preparation in to manage the stress and anxiety, I do it."

Keep your eyes on the prize

Competing as a teen, Lysacek admits that he did have moments where he wished that he could have hung out with friends instead of constantly heading to the rink. "It's an abnormal life," he admits. "But I'm sure that there are a lot of fields where that same sacrifice and discipline come in."

Be willing to change course

After skating for more than half his life, Lysacek recently started embarking on a new career in real estate. "I'm learning a new industry and taking on as much responsibility as I can," he says. "And I'm just trying to bring a lot of the ideals that I learned in my first chapter into this."

But, he adds, he hasn't left skating behind and will be going on tour in March. Balancing the two worlds has been interesting. "I'm very sore all of the time. I'm thinking about contracts, leasing, square footage while also trying to think about skating technique," he says.

HOW PERSONAL WEBSITES TRANSLATE INTO CAREER SUCCESS

Employers are searching for information about you online, whether you like it or not. If they don't find you, or something positive about you, then you will get passed over for the next candidate that pops up. More and more, employers are turning to the Internet in order to fill positions in their workforce because it's easy, they can conduct background checks, and they are looking for candidates with strong tech skills.

You are what you type. / ISTOCK

In a new study by brande.me and .ME Registry, they found that 84 percent of professionals have received benefits from having a personal website and 63 percent said websites are more valuable than resumes. Eighty-five percent said a personal website will become more important over the next five years. Here are a few tips, based on the research, that will help you craft a strong website that employers will take notice of.

Tips

1 Purchase your own domain name. Having your own name as a domain name (yourfullname.com or .net or .me) is extremely valuable because it will rank higher for your name in Google, and it's easier to direct people to it if they want more information on your background. In the study, 72 percent said that they have a personalized domain name and 73 percent said that having one is either very important or important for their online brand. You should claim your domain name before someone else does and charges you thousands of dollars for it.

2 Add various elements to your website. Your website should showcase your unique talents and abilities as well as your personal interests and motives. This way, you can connect with other professionals who share mutual interests while impressing employers with your achievements and experience. In the study, the elements of a website that received the best response from employers were work experience (27 percent), pictures (26 percent), biography (22 percent) and personal interests (19 percent).

3 Create a blog as part of your website. Blogs enable you to express your views on topics of your choice, and by producing blog posts, your website will rank higher in Google.

4 Use business cards to market your website. While websites and blogs are still innovative ways to distinguish yourself, the traditional forms of marketing are still valuable. Professionals of all ages still ask to see business cards when they're networking. Old-fashioned networking still works.

Horoscope

Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20

Spending time with people who don't appreciate you or are overly demanding will be tiresome and counterproductive. Surround yourself with people you know you can trust.

Aries | March 21-April 20

You will be right on target. Your high energy level will put you in a very competitive position. Set your goals and don't stop until you reach your destination.

Taurus | April 21-May 21

Choose your words carefully. Someone will try to put a negative spin on what you have to say. If you are precise, your remarks cannot be used against you.

Gemini | May 22-June 20

Business deals or real estate holdings will offer a profit. Do your research and you will discover how you can turn something you are good at into additional income.

Cancer | June 21-July 22

You will reduce your stress by pursuing activities that occupy your mind. Romance is looking up. Don't waste your time on someone who treats you poorly.

Leo | July 23-Aug. 22

Your plans will fall apart if you share your ideas with an untrustworthy person. Be discreet about what you are up to. If you want quality results, you must employ the element of surprise.

Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22

An ingenious project will pave the way to an advantageous opportunity. You will be surprised and honored to discover who has been carefully following your progress.

Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22

Group endeavors will not bring the results you are striving for. Fine-tune the details of a project you can pursue alone if you want to gain the upper hand over your competitors.

Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21

If you are uncertain or confused, ask direct questions. Don't be willing to accept incomplete information that can lead to a mistake or regrets. Get the facts.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21

Once your co-workers see how determined you are, they will want to help you. Putting in a stellar performance will attract attention.

Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20

Your ideas are unique and inspired, and they should be shared. The reaction you receive from someone will give you valuable input and assist you in figuring out your next move.

Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18

Someone you want to spend more time with or work alongside will be intimidated by your bold actions. Step back and let an important partnership develop naturally. EUGENIA LAST

Letters to the editor

Go get a STEM job yourself

'Yo, Hollywood, We need more girls in STEM' (Metro, Feb. 19) Hey Jenna Busch, Instead of dressing up like bleached Barbie with a ray gun for your cute little "a dumb girl clearly wrote this" article, why don't you try DOING SOMETHING. Instead of complaining about girls not having opportunity, girls being judged, girls not having toys geared to them, girls not being encouraged in schools for meaningful careers, why don't you try helping them? Why don't you start a campaign, volunteer, join an all girl after-school program, create a new toy? Oh no, wait, the much more intelligent way to show there is any truth to what you say (which, as a woman, I don't see much truth at all) is to whine and complain. Jenna, please. Make something of yourself! Teach future generations of women that they can be and do ANYTHING they want without a toy to lead them down the path! People like YOU are the reason WOMEN are held back!

JENN CLARK, VIA EMAIL

Beagles are a class act

Re: "Three reasons a beagle may not be for you" (Metro, Feb. 20-22) While I agree that an apartment in the city may not be the best place for a beagle, I totally disagree with the rest of your article. I had a beagle when I was a small child. His name was Mr. Boy and he was a gift to my Dad when I was born. This dog as well as other beagles are rather docile, independent little dogs. Hunting is in their blood and they are very intelligent animals. My dad always tells the story of when I was left to sleep while in my carriage under a peach tree and told the dog to watch the baby while he went indoors for something. The dog was always my buddy. There is a beagle rescue with a Facebook site that rescues these sweet animals from being experimented on in labs. They do well with their adopted families.

BLACKMAIL, AND BURLY BASEBALL PLAYERS

The strangest non-Deflate-gate subplot of this NFL offseason is the awkward relationship between all-world wide receiver Dez Bryant and the Dallas Cowboys.

Given Bryant's ability and charisma, one would think Dallas owner Jerry Jones would embrace Bryant the same way he embraces a bottle of Johnnie Walker Blue Label. But the two sides still haven't been able to agree on a contract extension, and Bryant is set to become a free agent.

No. 88 hasn't been shy about voicing his opinion on his uncertain future with Dallas on Twitter. Between wishing Michael Jordan a happy birthday and believing that Duke basketball is perfectly ranked at No. 5 in the country (@DezBryant: Duke #5 #truth), Bryant also lashed out at the Cowboys' passive-aggressiveness and touched on the rumors that there is a "Ray Rice -level" video of him that exists somewhere out in "the cloud."

When the great @Franky-Gonzalez3 tweeted at Bryant: "I love how dedicated @Dez-Bryant is to the @dallascowboys," Bryant shot back, "I wish they felt the same way, but it's cool. It's #business."

After ProFootballTalk's Mike Florio went on Dallas sports radio 105.3 The Fan last week and said that the Cowboys

Dez Bryant wants to get paid, but there are several obstacles in the way. / GETTY IMAGES were afraid of a video being released of Bryant in an "incident" that would have a "Ray Rice-type of impact," Bryant went to Twitter hours later and wrote, "Just quit with the B.S.. It's clear as day what's going on. I might need to do an exclusive interview about my life these past five years since the world is destined to know. I used to let people take advantage of my life. Now that I'm no longer allowing that to happen it seems to be a problem. I'm not ashamed of none of my past incidents because that's what made me who I am today."

Translated: "There is a probably a video of me doing something bad out there and it's probably going to come out soon, but the video's really not that bad, and I don't do stuff like that anymore, so shut up Jerry, and sign that check."

The Big East

There's always been this train of thought out there that the West Coast is healthier than the East Coast. But according to hundreds of Click-baiting listicles on mom-only websites like MSN and AOL.com, states like New Jersey, Massachusetts and Connecticut are actually healthy! This past December, americashealthrankings.org listed Northeast states like Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire and New Jersey in the Top 12.

Yes, the list was likely created by an obese 45-year-old Web marketer from Albany who just wants us snowed-in East Coasters to feel better about ourselves. But maybe, just maybe, there's a nugget of truth there.

Killing our rep this week, however, were two baseball players from two of the most prominent MLB franchises around. Pablo Sandoval showed up to Red Sox spring training looking like Bam Bam Bigelow, while C.C. Sabathia showed up to Yankees spring training looking like C.C. Sabathia.

An image of Sandoval's Fort Myers gut had many a Red Sox fan thinking that $95 million just went down the drain, while Yankees fans actually embraced Sabathia's return to the 300-pound mark.

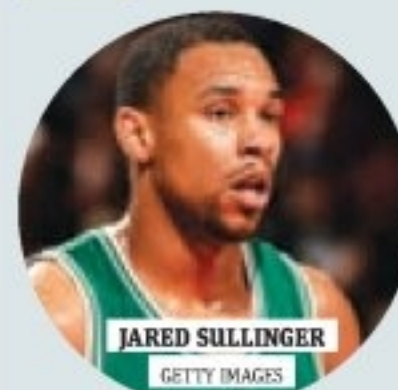

"I think last year I came in a little too light," the now 305-pound Sabathia said.

Not that either player spent a second of their winter in Boston or New York, but perception is reality here. The East Coast, as a whole, has some serious carbs to burn off this spring.

Celtics' Sullinger out for season

Jared Sullinger began coming into his own as the calendar flipped to 2015 as he had six 20-plus point games since Jan. 1.

Unfortunately for the forward and the Celtics, that growth will again be stunted as the team announced Sunday that Sullinger will miss the remainder of the 2014-15 season due to a left metatarsal stress fracture.

The injury is said to have originally occurred in the Celtics' 89-88 victory over the Hawks on Feb. 11. Sullinger was a huge part of Boston's upset win that night, scoring 17 points and grabbing 15 rebounds.

The Celtics will wrap up their West Coast road trip Monday against Phoenix (9 p.m., CSNNE). METRO

NU seeks to finally end drought

Northeastern hockey fans had to wait an extra two weeks for the 2015 Beanpot title game due to a snow postponement, but the wait will very much be worth it if the Huskies can capture their first Beanpot title since 1988 on Monday (7:30 p.m., NESN), when they square off against No. 2-ranked Boston University. METRO

Bruins break out of funk in Chicago

The Bruins hadn't won in their previous six games and it sure looked like No. 7 was on its way ahead of Sunday's meeting at Chicago. Patrice Bergeron and Loui Eriksson got the scoring started and Tuukka Rask recorded 26 saves on the day. METRO

Logano takes Daytona

Joey Logano turned what had been a pretty boring 57th running of the Daytona 500 into a frantic finish, and a race victory when he beat out Denny Hamlin (2nd) and Dale Earnhardt Jr. (3rd) in a two-lap spring to the finish. He outlasted several heavily favored drivers to win after a big wreck behind him and the top contenders late in the race brought a caution flag and ended the race. The 23-year-old won his first title at Daytona after Justin Allgaier's crash. "I can't believe it," Logano said. "This is absolutely amazing. Daytona 500, oh my God. Are you kidding me? I was so nervous the whole race."

UFC tackling drug issues

The Ultimate Fighting Championship had been rocked by recent drug test failures of high-profile stars. This past week, the company began to fight back.

"We're extremely disappointed by the failed drug tests," UFC co-owner Lorenzo Fertitta said last week.

Fertitta, who was joined by UFC president Dana White, said the UFC will partner with a to-be-determined third-party company who will take care of the testing, both in and out of competition for all fighters under contract. Fertitta added the UFC will "advocate" to state athletic commissions for stringent punishments for fighters who fail drug tests, before stating he hopes the plan will be fully implemented by July 1.

Both Anderson Silva and Nick Diaz failed postfight tests after their UFC 183 bout. / GETTY IMAGES

White suggested first-time punishments could range between "two-and-four years."

"If you are using [performance enhancing drugs] you are going to get caught," White continued. "I don't know if there [is a drug epidemic] here. It's definitely a problem. We're about to find out [how significant a problem drug use in UFC is]. It's going to get a lot worse before it gets better."

Not two full months into 2015, UFC has seen light-heavyweight Jon Jones, future Hall-of-Famer Anderson Silva and Nick Diaz all fail drug tests. Jones was tested out of competition on Dec. 4 and failed for cocaine. According to White, Jones passed two subsequent tests for illicit and performance-enhancing drugs.

Silva failed a pre-UFC 183 test for Drostanolone and Androstosterone, and failed post-fight tests for Oxazepam and Temazepam. Diaz, who lost to Silva via unanimous decision at UFC 183, failed a post-fight test for marijuana metabolites.

Fertitta said UFC "will pay for additional costs" for the testing, but noted he is unsure of the program's total cost. Fertitta said UFC has been engaged in discussions with companies who will administer and collect both blood and urine for the tests, but refused to name the companies.

"We can do better," Fertitta said, before noting UFC had "firsthand" knowledge of "19" out-of-competition tests, which saw "26 percent" of fighters fail.

UFC notebook

Ronda Rousey has a message for those who think the UFC could be flirting with danger by having women's fights as the centerpiece of pay-per-views: It's 2015.

"Why are we still asking [that] question," Rousey said when asked by a reporter from Breitbart Sports if she was concerned about potential fan backlash to the Feb. 28 UFC 184 pay-per-view.

Rousey's women's bantam-weight title defense against Cat Zingano will headline UFC 184 card, and the Raquel Pennington-Holly Holm fight is the semi-main event. DENIS GORMAN
